I told him that the last three of those seven requirements were easier said than done. "Not at all," he said. "If you do all those things consistently, you'll attain the goal." Before he put us on our way, he said to me, "Show me what you know. Bring me your absolute certainty." That struck me as a curious sort of demand, but I thought it wise to accept the challenge. I nodded solemnly. "You know absolutely that you don't know anything, do you?" he asked. "Not a thing," I said. "Don't think that you're doing fine," he said. "In the very beginning, everything is absolute certainty. Just don't think that you can keep it up."
