the chamber that holds the computer's motherboard. He's taking the computer apart. The last step is to see if the SMAP battery's still good. They take the battery out, check the voltage. The voltage's down by about one-tenth of a volt. They plug it back in. The battery jumps to full voltage, indicating it's a good battery. They test the voltage again. It's dropped to 0.7 volts. The battery's about half its life. It needs to be charged to full power, but they don't have a charger. The battery last night? A few weeks ago? That would have been about the time it was stolen, Wilson guesses. The team
