Why is the cursor color of a material input element colored as bold and underlined? The only way I can get it to actually bold and underline the text is to have it styled as a block, and that looks crazy. A: I was looking for an answer to the same question, but I found it here: Basically, a text field is the default block-level element. Google uses this to their advantage with an underline. As for bold, google recommends the use of H2/H3 tags for this, but they note they may not support it on all browsers. William O. Beyer

AIRES (Reuters) - Argentine President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner said on Wednesday it was the right time to hold talks with U.S. President Donald Trump over the issue of trade after he called her
