Shaun White Banned By U.S. Ski And Snowboard Association Shaun White is clearly in a no-compromise zone, and it's not just for his jaunty hat, baggy clothes, and smirk. The U.S. Ski and Snowboard Association has banned him from all of their events for this year. White's first event was cancelled after a segment of his show on ESPN violated his previous doping ban. White's second event was threatened and then cancelled when his original physiotherapist and his replacement were found to have a conflict of interest. Now, he'll be trying to win a third Olympics gold at the 2018 Winter Olympics. NBC will air the competitions this year.

Q: Changing the size of an image based on the size of the screen It seems like a really basic concept, but not sure how to approach it. I need to load an image of a particular size: The image is based on a particular size, for example 512x512 pixels Now, what I need to do is to dynamically change the size of the image based on the width and height of the screen As a running example if the screen is 1024x768 then I want the image to be displayed at 1024x768. If the screen becomes larger for example 2048x768, then I want the image to dynamically increase in size and be displayed at 1024x768. The only thing is, if I use the image.png file itself it seems to be dependent on the size of the browser window. So as the window size changes the image does not change accordingly. Any ideas on what I'm doing wrong here? A: If I understand you correctly, you have the image on a server and want to serve it based on the screen size. You can't do that with just the source
