An interdisciplinary team of rhinosurgeons developed and employed a protocol for endoscopic surgery on the children population. A protocol for endoscopic sinus surgery was established and has been successfully applied in the management of sinonasal disease in pediatric patients. A subgroup of endoscopic sinus surgeries was performed on a second cohort of pediatric patients using double-lumen tubes. In the endoscopic group of pediatric patients, the main indications for surgery were persistent middle meatal duralization, nasal polyposis, and fungal balls. Adequate functional restoration of the nose and ethmoid complex was achieved in 83.3%. The endoscopic sinus surgery technique described in this paper is well suited to overcome most pathological problems in pediatric patients, and it may be done with good results.
