The present invention relates to a constant velocity universal joint, and more particularly to a tripod type constant velocity universal joint. A constant velocity universal joint is adapted to transmit a rotational motion between two rotatable members, in which the rotational motion between the two rotatable members is allowed to transmit without causing friction. The following structures have been proposed in the prior art constant velocity universal joint of the above kind. (1) A joint having ball grooves and roller grooves formed on an outer circumferential surface of an outer joint member and inner circumferential surface of an inner joint member, and a plurality of torque transmission balls disposed between the ball grooves and the roller grooves. (2) A joint having roller grooves formed in an outer circumferential surface of an outer joint member, and tapered roller grooves formed in an inner circumferential surface of an inner joint member which are inclined to the axis thereof, the roller grooves formed in the outer circumferential surface of the outer joint member and the roller grooves formed in the inner circumferential surface of the inner joint member being connected to each other in the direction in which the inner joint member moves outwards (in a manner so
