In vitro assessment of genetic toxicity of tetrahydrofuran in human peripheral blood lymphocytes. Tetrahydrofuran (THF) is a solvent used in many industrial fields as well as in the pharmaceutical and food industries. In the present study, the cytotoxicity, genotoxicity and biochemical changes in primary human lymphocytes were studied in order to determine their potential health hazard in humans. The results of the cell viability test, micronucleus test, comet assay, in situ detection of mitochondrial membrane potential, double-strand DNA damage by comet tail intensity and phytohaemagglutinin stimulation test showed that the THF at concentrations lower than 200 ppm has no significant toxic effects on lymphocytes, while the maximum Topographic and clinical correlations]. The retroperitoneal space is the site of entry for the great majority of malignant tumors. It is also a common site for metastatic disease. The topography of these tumors along the retroperitoneal area is reviewed. Renal cell carcinoma, melanoma, as well as sarcoma, small intestine carcinoma and pancreas carcinoma belong to the class of tumors with high propensity to metastasize to the retroperitoneal area. The clinical presentation of the metastatic disease in these patients is usually related to the size of the primary tumor and the number of secondary sites. One of the usual patterns of clinical presentation is that of the syndrome of long bone metastasis in patients with renal cell carcinoma. Clinical data regarding the abdominal manifestations of these metastases are also presented.
