History Brickfair started in 1991 as a festival in Bury St Edmunds dedicated to the production, conservation and use of bricks, and was held for the first time in 1991. From its beginning, the focus of the festival has been on the heritage and vernacular qualities of brick and that emphasis remains today, the festival is a celebration of the bricks and of bricks as a built object. BrickFair aims to promote traditional and local skills, including brickmaking, and give people the opportunity to meet and discuss their activities, and the objects made in their workshops. Over the years, the festival has developed into an annual, three-day, family-friendly event at the Hertfordshire town of Dunsfold, with more than 40,000 visitors each year. The festival features workshops, talks, music, children's activities, crafts and games. The festival is held during the third week of September. International Connections In 2017, Brickfair was one of the Connecting Cultures promoted by the European Union, providing a series of events designed to help people understand the differences between communities and cultures across Europe. The press conference was a rare opportunity for the two men, who are great friends, to spend time together. I asked Mayweather to pick the winner in a boxing match between them. In the excitement of the moment, Mayweather, who has long had a wealth
