The riveting story of a secret war. Discover the life of an officer during the turbulent years of World War II. Our long term goal is to understand how bacteria can negotiate this deadly partnership with their hosts. In this proposal, we focus on the transition from initially localized infection to the systemic spread of Listeria monocytogenes across the vascular system. L. monocytogenes is a gram-positive intracellular pathogen that can be ingested by phagocytic cells of the innate immune system, but which must cross the endothelial barrier to reach sites of tissue infection. Although this process has been well characterized, how L. monocytogenes induces vascular breakdown in these cells is not known. Our preliminary data showed that L. monocytogenes triggers the production of large extracellular structures (LES) that are derived from the plasma membrane of infected cells. We hypothesize that LES allow the bacteria to survive in the vasculature and thereby contribute to systemic spread. We propose to pursue four specific aims to test our hypothesis. In Aim 1, we will determine the molecular and cellular mechanisms that regulate formation of L. 3e33713323
