What's new:

Hammer Kid is an American television action-adventure cartoon produced by Hanna Barbera Productions in association with Singapore-based Di Novi Pictures (DNF Investments) in 1980-1981. It aired on NBC on Saturday mornings from September 6, 1980 to March 1, 1981, at 8:30 a.m. Eastern/7:30 a.m. Pacific. It was notable for its Australian cast, which included future AFI Award winners Joel Barry, Scott Bakula, Grant Moninger and Lesley Hurst. An unusually long-running cartoon for its times, Hammer Kid had a mix of traditional, Fantasy and live-action elements as well as a solid cult following. Many production and creator staff would move on to various notable Hanna Barbera projects including The Flintstones, The Jetsons and The Ghostbusters. Production history Hammer Kid was conceived as a sequel to another live-action action cartoon, The Banana Splits. The original Banana Splits was a Western-styled show created for Syndication in 1974 which featured songs by the Banana Splits, starring Ron Ely who voiced the character of Banana, their descendant-to-be. The Banana Splits ran for four seasons, with half-hour episodes aired for eleven weeks on NBC (back-to-back with another Hanna-Barbera show, Freek's Activity Day) and a sixth syndicated season (also a half-hour show) between 1976-1977. A few years after the Banana Splits ended, Hanna-Barbera decided to adapt the Western-style show into a series of Western-like Cartoon Time. Most of the Banana Splits grew up in Technicolor, and the new Cartoon Time would also be in Technicolor, but retained the original Banana Splits songs. Not only would the Banana Splits be adapted as part of the new show, but they would be taken in several different directions, including a show featuring Rocko and his friends that was before and after the Banana Splits. Caravan was developed around Pin-Head, a group of masked bandits led by Pinhead. He attempted to lead them in raiding a well-guarded train. This was the second serious cartoon, but the first to attempt to introduce live-action into a cartoon setting. Almost immediately after its release, public reaction was largely negative toward the product and many studios backed out of further participation in the project, including Warner Bros. and their soon-

Of course, "Kill Bill Vol. 1" and "Kill Bill Vol. 2" are already connected to the hugely influential "Scream" franchise while "Django Unchained" is based on the "Blacksploitation" subgenre of recent years. Here, probably his most autobiographical movie to date, Tarantino brings us back to one of his earliest childhood friendships — the classic sitcom "Pinky and The Brain." We meet Dorothy (Diane Lane) as she's being released after being wrongly imprisoned for 10 years. Yes, this is the same Diane Lane who barely aged her appearance in "Cape Fear" and "Unforgettable." In "Dorothy and the Truth about Harry," she's a nervous, sympathetic lawyer who slowly begins to realize that her almost decade-old conviction has been overturned and that she's free to leave. And in Dorothy's
